This study aimed to determine the difference in the level of teaching materials mastery as seen from the school status, the length of service, and the education level of economics teacher.

This research was a comparative study conducted in senior high schools and Islamic senior high schools in Sleman in September 2013. The population of this study was the economics teachers, totaling 74 people, while the sample was 42 respondents. The samples were taken by purposive sampling technique. The data were collected by using open questionnaires and closed questionnaire. The data were analyzed by using Chi-Square.

The results of this study indicated that: (1) there was a difference in the level of teaching materials mastery as seen from the school status ($\text{sig. } 0.015 < \alpha = 0.05$) with a difference level of 8.355, meaning that the level of teaching materials mastery in public schools was higher than private schools; (2) there was a difference in the level of teaching materials mastery as seen from the length of service ($\text{sig. } 0.005 < \alpha = 0.05$) with a difference level of 18.584, meaning that the level of teaching materials mastery of the teachers who had been teaching for long time was higher than the teachers who were recently teaching; (3) there was no difference in the level of teaching materials mastery as seen from the education level of the economics teacher ($\text{sig. } 0.702 > \alpha = 0.05$) with a difference level of 2.183.
