This study aims to determine the factors of juvenile delinquency, the impact of juvenile delinquency, and solutions for handling juvenile delinquency from a private vocational high school (SMK) student in Yogyakarta, and other aspects that cause the impact of juvenile delinquency.

The type of this research was a case study designed qualitative research. The informant was a student of SMK Marsudi Luhur. Data collection techniques used were interviews. Data validation was triangulated using member check technique. Qualitative data analysis techniques include the following steps: making verbatim, coding from verbatim, categorizing, filtering data, and interpreting.

The results showed that there were factors from the respondent's environment such as parents, school, peers, and associations that triggered respondents to commit juvenile delinquency. The things that respondents do include free sex, fighting and brawls, smoking and drinking alcohol, and gambling. The feelings that respondents experienced were curiosity, wanting to find their identity, feeling afraid after committing misbehavior, respondents also have thoughts of solidarity in helping friends even though the delinquency is negative, and still want to enjoy their teenage years. From the delinquency, respondents experienced various effects such as asthma, addiction to gambling and free sex, running out of pocket money, having a debt to his friends, and study disruption, and then people in the surrounding viewed him negatively. The reason the respondent continues to do all these things, even though it has a bad impact on him, is because he still wants to enjoy his youth and does not yet have a solution to stop juvenile delinquency.
