ABSTRACT

Widyastiarni, Weppy. (2013). An Analysis of English Blends in the Headlines of The Jakarta Post Newspaper 2012 Edition. Yogyakarta: English Language Education Study Program, Department of Language and Arts Education, Faculty of Teachers Training and Education, Sanata Dharma University.

This research analyzes English blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. An English blend is one type of word formation that combines two words become one word by blending them (Plag, 2003, p. 122).

The aim of this research is to answer three research questions: (1) Do the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions use English blends? (2) What are the types of blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions? (3) What are the recommendations for ELESPP students to learn blends?

This research used content analysis as the research method. The data were taken from The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions.

From the result of the data, the researcher discovered ten blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. According to Plag (2003), there are 4 blends belonging to type 1: squeaks, boost, clemency, and clashes. There are 3 English blends belonging to type 2; rampage, cinephiles, criminologist and three were belonging to type 3; systemic, democratic, and iconic. Based on Szymanek's theory (1989), there are four ways in learning English blends from their forms: (1) to learn blends by seeing blends as the combination of two clipped forms in a single lexeme, (2) one can take the initial portion of one word and the final section of the other, (3) blends are created from one word appearing in their shortened form, and (4) blends can be seen as two words which partially overlap with each other.

ABSTRAK

Penelitian ini menganalisis blends yang digunakan di dalam judul pada koran edisi Januari sampai Desember 2012. Blends adalah salah satu jenis word formation yang menggabungkan dua kata menjadi satu (Plag, 2003, p. 122).

Penelitian ini bertujuan untuk menjawab tiga pertanyaan: (1) Apakah judul-judul pada koran The Jakarta Post edisi 2012 menggunakan blends? (2) Tipe blends apa saja yang digunakan di koran The Jakarta Post edisi Januari sampai Desember 2012? (3) Apa yang direkomendasikan untuk mahasiswa PBI untuk mempelajari blends?

Dari hasil penelitian, terdapat sepuluh blends yang digunakan pada judul-judul koran edisi Januari sampai Desember 2012. Menurut Plag (2003), terdapat empat blends pada tipe 1: squeaks, boost, clemency, dan clashes. Tiga blends pada tipe 2: rampage, cinephiles, criminologist dan tiga blends pada tipe 3: systemic, democratic, dan iconic. Berdasarkan teori Szymanek (1989), ada empat cara mempelajari blends dari bentuknya: (1) melihat blends sebagai kombinasi dua bentuk terpotong di leksim tunggal, (2) seseorang dapat mengambil bagian awal dari satu kata dan bagian akhir yang lain, (3) blends dibentuk dari satu kata yang muncul dalam bentuk yang lebih kecil, dan (4) blends dapat dilihat sebagai dua kata yang tumpang tindih pada satu sama lain.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

The researcher divides this chapter into two parts: The background and research method. The background part consists of information, ideas and some reasons that support the research. The research method part shows the description of the procedure and all aspects involved in the research.

A. Background

A blend word is one type of word formations that can create a new word “by ‘blending’ one word with another” (Quirk, Greenbaum, Leech, & Svartvik, 1985, p. 1583). Combining two words to create a new word can be an interesting activity. For example, the word brunch is from two words breakfast and lunch. Being curious and eager to have a better understanding on English blends, the researcher decided to analyze English blends written in a newspaper. Danks (2003, p. 3) states that blends often occur in magazines and newspapers.

The researcher took the opportunity to study English blends through The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. There are various types of English blends that can be found in the headlines of the newspapers. By providing more description of blends, types of blends, and how to learn blends, this research helps English Language Education Study Program (ELESP) students to find more examples of blends which are used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. In this research, the researcher provides information on what English blends are, how many types of blends in English, and how to study them. By studying blends as one part of word-formation, the learners will have the ability to explore the base of words (Daulton, 2008, p. 218).

The researcher decided to choose a printed newspaper instead of the online version because it is easier to be read, brought and analyzed. The printed newspapers can reach some remote areas that do not have any internet connection. People can file a printed newspaper, touch it, and recycle it. Thus, people do not need to pay the internet and the electricity to update the news.

This research is also one of knowledge developments in a morphological field that has several benefits for ELESP students. Through this research, the students can see one rule in identifying blends from Plag (2003, p. 123). Plag proposes one rule as stated in form of a formula,  $\{A B + C D \rightarrow A D\}$ . A, B, C, and D are the names which are given to each syllable of words. A, B are represented two syllables of the first word and C, D are for the second word. Finally, A and D are two syllables which created a new word which was the combination of the first and second word.

Considering the fact that the ability to analyze blends is an effective way for ELESP students, to learn and form blends, the researcher formulates three research problems to be addressed in this research. The first is whether the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions use English blends. The second is what the types of blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions are. The third is what recommendations for ELESP students to learn blends are.

Related to the research problems, there are three objectives aimed to achieve in this research. Firstly, this study aims to find out whether there are blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. To achieve this first objective, morphological processes are needed to do to prove that there are blends used in the headlines. Secondly, the objective of this research is to identify the types of blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. Thirdly, this research is going to find out the recommendations for ELESP students to learn blends.

In this part, the researcher would like to discuss the research limitation. The content limitation of this research is focusing on headlines of The Jakarta Post editions January to December 2012 as the source of data. The Jakarta Post is a serial-published newspaper that contains news on current events of special or general interest. The individual parts are listed chronologically or numerically. A newspaper is normally daily published. A newspaper also reports the events that have occurred within the 24-hour period (Library of Congress, 2002). It implies that a newspaper is a serial of publication published frequently and it contains news.

In this research, the researcher focuses on morphology, which concerns about the form of words. One of the scopes of morphology is word formation, which includes blends. Blend is a process of forming a new word from two existing words by maintaining elements of both constituents (cf. Schmid 2005, pp. 224-225). O'Grady and Guzman (1997, p. 158) state that, "Blends are created from non-morphemic parts of two already existing items."

Therefore, the researcher limits the data on the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. A headline should summarize the news that follows and appear in the form of a sentence. A newspaper headline is the first thing that the readers notice in a newspaper. It also helps the readers to decide whether they want to continue reading the news or skip it (Paskova, 2009, p. 1).

B. Research Method

The type of the reasearch chosen in this research was a qualitative research. A qualitative research focuses on a message in the forms of written document (Borg & Gall, 2007, p. 287). The focus of this research is to analyze blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions.

This research used content analysis as the research method. Content analysis is “a technique that enables researchers to study human behavior in an indirect way through an analysis of their communications” (Fraenkel & Wallen, 2008, p. 472). The researcher took the data from a newspaper as an indirect way to analyze and interpret human communication. In this study, the newspapers were taken from The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions.

According to Merriam (2002), data are collected through interviews, observations, or document analysis. In this research, data were collected through an observation. The observation was conducted from January to December 2012 in the library of Sanata Dharma University Yogyakarta. After conducting the observation, the researcher collected the data by listing the samples of blends in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. From January to February 2013, the researcher input the data. Finally, from March to April 2013, the researcher wrote the report.

The primary sources of the data were 900 headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. The researcher chose The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions since it is Indonesia's leading English-language daily. The Jakarta Post was first published in April 25, 1983. The goals of The Jakarta Post are to improve the standard of English media in Indonesia and to produce quality newspapers with an Indonesian perspective. In this research, the researcher also included Sunday Edition as the additional data sources which was first published in September 18, 1994 (The Jakarta Post's History Website).

The researcher used dictionaries as the secondary sources of the data. In order to support the data and seek the base word of blends, the researcher used Oxford printed dictionary, and Oxford online dictionary from web <http://oxforddictionaries.com/>.

In collecting data, there were two instruments used in this qualitative research. The primary instrument is the researcher (Merriam, 2002, p. 5). The researcher plays a key role in collecting and analyzing the data.

The second instrument was a table. The table was used to analyze blends on the headlines of The Jakarta Post newspapers. The researcher put the headlines, the date of publishing, and the base word of blends (Bat-el, 2006).

Table.1 Table of Blends Analysis

No	The Date	The Headlines	Blends	Type of Blends
				1	2	3

Note: 1 for Plag’s rule (2003),  $AB+CD =AD$

2 for Plag’s rule (2003),  $AB+CD =ABD/ACD$

3 for splinters (Bauer, 2006)

To analyze the data, the researcher used two theories on blends from Plag (2003) and Bauer (2006). After collecting blends, the researcher used Oxford dictionaries to find the base words of blends from the data. Finally, the researcher classified blends into their types.

Based on the explanation above, it can be concluded that there were seven steps were conducted in this research. Firstly, the researcher decided the topic to be discussed. Secondly, the researcher conducted a library study in order to find theories on blends. The researcher found theories from Szymanek (1989), O’Grady (1997), Plag (2003), and Bauer (2006). Thirdly, the researcher analyzed the data and found the base words of blends. In this step, the researcher took the words from the headlines and looked for the base words from Oxford online dictionary. After finding the base words, the researcher divided them into which parts that were used and which were not used. The researcher gave them label A, B, C, or D. The next step is classifying the blends to their types based on the formula from Plag (2003). Finally, the researcher wrote the report as the results of the research.

CHAPTER II

DISCUSSION

This chapter consists of review of related literatures and the findings as well as the interpretation of the findings. The review of related literatures focuses on the theories that support this research. The theories are on morphology, words, morphemes, word formation, and types of blends.

A. Theories on Blends

In this research, the researcher attempts to present some theories on blends from general ones to specific ones and provide some supporting ideas.

1. Morphology

Since blends are seen as a morphological process, the researcher begins with the explanation of morphology itself. “Morphology is the system of categories and rules involved in word formation and interpretation“ O’Grady and Guzman (1997, p. 132). In other words, morphology can be defined as the basic principles of word structure. In addition, they state that, “Linguists use the term morphology to refer to the part of the grammar that concerns with words and word formation.”

2. Words

Words can be defined as the smallest free form found in language. “A free form is an element that can occur in isolation and/or whose position with respect to neighboring elements is not entirely fixed” O’Grady and Guzman (1997, p.

132). A free form is simply an element that does not have to occur in a fixed position with respect to neighboring elements.

3. Morphemes

Morpheme is the most important component of word structure that is the smallest unit of meaning (O’Grady & Guzman, 1997). Words also have an internal structure consisting of smallest units organized. In short, morphemes are the minimal units of word building in a language; they cannot be broken down any further into recognizable or meaningful parts (Akmajian, Demers, Farmer, & Harnish, 1995, p. 16). Akmajian et al. (1995, p. 17) propose a basic classification of English morphemes:

a. Free and Bound Morpheme

According to O’Grady and Guzman (1997), free morpheme is a morpheme that can be a word by itself. It can stand alone as an independent word in a phrase, such as the word tree in John sat in the tree (Akmajian et al., 1995). On the other hand, morpheme that must be attached to another element is a bound morpheme. According to Akmajian et al. (1995, p. 16), bound morphemes cannot stand alone but must be attached to another morpheme. For example, the plural morpheme -s, which can only occur attached to nouns apple in order to become a word apples.

b. Affixes

Certain bound morphemes are known as affixes (e.g., -s). There are two types of affixes, namely prefix, and suffix. Prefix is an affix that is attached in front of the base, whereas suffix is an affix attached in the end of its base (O'Grady & Guzman, 1997).

c. Bases

The morpheme to which an affixes is attached is the base (or stem) morpheme Akmajian et al. (1995, p. 17). A base is "any unit whatsoever to which affixes of any kind can be added" (Katamba, 1993, p. 45). Meanwhile, O'Grady and Guzman say, "a base is the form to which an affix is added.

4. Word Formation

There are some types of word formation such as conversion, clipping, backformation, acronyms, onomatopoeia, and blends. In this study, the researcher focuses on blends.

A. Blends

1. Definition

Blend is a process of forming a new word from two existing words by maintaining elements of both constituents (cf. Schmid 2005, p. 224-225). O'Grady and Guzman (1997, p. 158) state that, "blends are created from non-morphemic parts of two already existing items."

O'Grady and Guzman give a well-known example of blends like brunch from breakfast and lunch, smog from smoke and fog, and infomercial from information and commercial. Plag (2003, p. 121) states blends as another large class of complex words whose formation is best described in terms of prosodic categories. Blends can be defined as words that combine two (rarely three or more) words into one, deleting material from one or both of the source words (Plag, 2003, p. 121).

2. Types of Blends

In this research, the researcher takes three types of blends, which two types from Plag (2003), and one type from splinters (Bauer, 2006).

a. Blends type 1

According to Plag (2003), blends are created by combining the first syllable and the last syllable of two different words become a new word. As he forms a rule of  $AB + CD = AD$ . This rule can be found in some words, such as motor + hotel = motel, channel + tunnel = chunnel, and compressor + expander = compander. The researcher takes this formula as the type 1 of blends.

b. Blends type 2

The researcher takes the second type of blends from Plag (2003). This type of blends is formed by blending a word with the last syllable of another word. In short, this type can be formulated as  $AB+CD = ABD$  or  $ACD$ . B or C can be null and one of two words may appear in its full word. For examples, the word boatel from boat + hotel, breathalyzer from breath + analyzer, and mocamp from motor + camp.

c. Blends type 3

Bauer (2006) proposes one type of blends in form of splinters. Splinter as a part of word that sometimes can be reanalyzed as a word, affixes, and as word-building. There are familiar examples of splinters such as in words alcoholic, chocoholic and shopoholic. In morphological terms, these words are divided into alcohol and -ic, choco and -oholic, shop and -oholic.

Besides, splinters -on can be found in words such as dralon, nylon, rayon, and xenon. The -x occurs in trade names such as Clorox, Kleenex, Pyrex, and Tampax. The -on and -x does not carry any denotation, but they can create new words (Bauer, 2006, p. 77). There are also some affixes that considered as splinters, such as -thon(aerobathon), dino-(dinosploitation), -bilia(memorabilia), -ploitation(rocksploitation), -unnel(chunnel), -oodle(poodle).

5. Newspapers

A newspaper is a serial publication, which contains news on current events of special or general interests. The individual parts are listed chronologically or numerically. It also appears frequently, usually at least once a week but sometimes monthly. All general interest newspapers mainly reporting events that have occurred within the 24-hour period before going to press (Library of Congress, 2002). It implies that a newspaper is a serial publication that published frequently and it contains news.

The Jakarta Post is one of popular English newspapers published in Indonesia. Based on the history of The Jakarta Post newspaper (2012), it contains 28 pages and consists of headlines, sports, businsses, opinion, current issues, nation, world, archipelago and music. It appears everyday in almost all parts of Indonesia. It is first published in April 25, 1983. The goal of this newspaper is to improve English language media in Indonesia with the highest quality that provides complete news to its readers.

In 1994, The Jakarta Post published Sunday Post in order to provide more analytical news and views that can be used by the readers. It contains about 40 pages and also the latest news in weekday editions. Sunday Post is supported by more entertainment, and probes in what is going on in world over.

B. The Research's Findings

In this part, the researcher is going to answer the research questions by providing data from The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions and the interpretation of the findings. To answer the first question, whether the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions use English blends, the researcher studied every headline published in 2012. There are 900 headlines in The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. By using theories from Plag (2003), Bauer (2006), and also Oxford dictionary as supporting sources in finding the base words, the researcher discovered ten blends out of 900 headlines in 2012. The blends together with their analysis are listed in Table. 1.

In order to answer the second question, what types of blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions, the researcher provides data in Table 1.

Table 2. Blends Analysis in the Headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions

There are four blends that belong to type 1, namely are squeaks, boost, clemency, and clashes. These words can be classified as type 1 according to Plag's rule (2003, p. 123 )  $AB + CD = AD$ . The word squeaks is from squeal + shriek, boost is from boom + hoist, clemency is from clement + mercy, and clashes is from clap + crash (Oxforddictionaries.com, 2012). These words can be analyzed:

- $\frac{\text{Squeal} + \text{shriek}}{A \quad B + C \quad D = A \quad D} = \text{Squeaks}$
- $\frac{\text{Boom} + \text{hoist}}{A \quad B + C \quad D = A \quad D} = \text{Boost}$

- $\frac{\text{Clement}}{A} + \frac{\text{mercy}}{B+C} = \frac{\text{Clemency}}{D} = A \quad D$
- $\frac{\text{Clap}}{A} + \frac{\text{crashes}}{B+C} = \frac{\text{Clashes}}{D} = A \quad D$

There are three blends belonging to type 2. They are rampage, from ramp + rage, cinephiles from cinema + philes, criminologist from criminal + logist (Oxforddictionaries.com, 2012). These words can be classified based on Plag (2003), into  $AB + CD = ABD / ACD$ :

- $\frac{\text{Ramp}}{A} + \frac{\text{rage}}{B+C} = \frac{\text{rampage}}{D} = AB \quad D$
- $\frac{\text{Cinema}}{A} + \frac{\text{philes}}{B+C} = \frac{\text{cinephiles}}{D} = A \quad CD$
- $\frac{\text{Criminal}}{A} + \frac{\text{logist}}{B+C} = \frac{\text{criminologist}}{D} = A \quad CD$

There are also three forms of blends included in type 3. They are systemic, democratic, and iconic. These three words fill the criteria of splinters -ic (Bauer, 2006, p. 77) at the end of the words.

- Systemic = system(-ic)
- Democratic = democrat(-ic)
- Iconic = icon(-ic)

Based on the result, the researcher discovered that most of blends used in headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions belong to type 1. Thus, type 1 is the basic principle in forming blends. Bat-el (2006, p. 67) gives many examples of blends that belong to type 1. For examples, the word alphameric comes from alphabetic + numeric, the word econocrat comes from economist + bureaucrat, and the word Texaco comes from Texas + (New) Mexico.

Finally, the last research problem is asking about the recommendations for ELESP students to learn blends from their forms. This problem can be answered by using theories from Szymanek (1989, p. 100). He proposes four ways to learn English blends from their forms.

The first way to learn blends is by seeing blends as the combination of two clipped forms in a single lexeme (Szymanek, 1989, p. 100). For examples, the word Amerind, comes from Amer(ican) + Ind(iand), and comintern, from com(munist) + intern(ational).

Secondly, one can take the initial portion of one word and the final section of the other (Szymanek, 1989, p. 100). For examples br(eakfast) + (l)unch = brunch, Ox(ford) + (Cam)bridge = Oxbridge, and cap(sule) + (tab)let = caplet.

Thirdly, blends is created from one word appears in its shortened form (Szymanek, 1989, p. 100). For examples, the word urine + (an)alysis = urinalysis, and cable + (tele)gram = telegram.

The last, blends can be seen as two words which partially overlap upon each other (Szymanek, 1989, p. 100). As can be seen in the following examples:

S lang	Cor rect
language = slanguage	rect itude = correctitude
Mix on	Mo t (or)
(ec) on omics = nixonomics	(ho) t el = motel

ELESP students can learn blends through those four ways. The first one is blends which is the combination of two clipped forms in a single lexeme. The second way is seeing the initial in the two basic words which one takes the initial portion of one word and the final section of others. The third way is seeing one word appears in its shortened form. The last one is the combination of two words which overlap with each other (Szymanek, 1989, p. 100).

CHAPTER III

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

In this paper, the researcher provides the conclusion of the study as the answers of three problem formulations and provides the recommendations for learners.

A. Conclusions

There were three research questions that needed to be solved. Firstly, do the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions use English blends? Secondly, what are the types of blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions? Thirdly, what are the recommendations for ELESP students to learn blends?

In order to solve the first question, the researcher used morphological processes to prove whether there were any English blends used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. The researcher used two theories on blends. The first theory is from Plag (2003), stating that blends can be analyzed by a rule,  $A B + C D \rightarrow A D$ . The second theory is from Bauer (2006, p. 77) stating that splinters are sometimes reanalyzed as words, sometimes affixes, and sometimes as word-building elements that do not appear to have any particular denotation.

The researcher discovered ten English blends out of 900 headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. English blends used were squeaks, systemic, boost, democratic, rampage, cinephiles, criminologist, clemency, clashes, and iconic.

In answering the second question, the researcher used three types of blends. Two types of blends are from Plag (2003), and one type is from Bauer (2006). The first type is  $AB+CD=AD$ , the second type is  $AB+CD=ABD$  (Plag, 2003). The third type is usually used in the form of -ic in the word alcoholic, and -oholic in the word chocoholic and shopoholic.

In this research, there are four English blends belonging to the first type. The blends are squeaks, boost, clemency, and clashes. There are three English blends belonging to the second type; rampage, cinephiles, criminologist, and three blends belong to the third type; systemic, democratic, and iconic. From the data, there are more blends type 1 used in The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions because type 1 can be considered as the basic principle in forming English blends.

The researcher implemented Szymanek's theory (1989) to answer the third problem. Szymanek (1989, p. 100) proposes four ways to learn English blends from their forms. The first way to learn blends is by seeing blends as the combination of two clipped forms in a single lexeme. For example, in the word Amerind is from Amer(ican) + Ind(iand). Secondly, one can take the initial portion of one word and the final section of the other. For example, the word br(eakfast) + (l)unch = brunch. Thirdly, blends are created from one word appears in its shortened form. For examples, the word urine + (an)alysis = urinalysis. The last, blends can be seen as two words which partially overlap upon each other. For example

|lang|uage = slanguage.

By employing those theories, the researcher concluded that ELESP students can learn English blends through the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions. Since English blends are used in the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions in three different types of blends. It is hoped this study can accommodate the needs to ELESP students in preparing for their future researches. Another conclusion that can be considered in using Szymanek's theory is that ELESP students can learn English blends occurring in different forms. It is also hoped that this study can help students to be familiar with English blends so they can enhance their vocabulary.

B. Recommendations

The researcher provides recommendations for English teachers and future researchers.

1. For ELESP Students

The ELESP students can identify blend words from many kinds of medias. Furthermore, they can create or innovate their own blends. After creating their blends, they can use them properly in daily activities and speeches.

2. For ELESP Lecturers

The lecturers can use blends analysis on the headlines of The Jakarta Post in January to December 2012 editions as one of materials in morphology classes.

The lecturers can give the opportunity to students analyzing or identifying blends by giving the students example of blends. Besides, a blend analysis can be used for students' research projects. Lecturers can give it to in-class work or student's assignment.

3. For Future Researchers

English blends are an interesting topic to learn and to analyze. The future researchers can conduct research on blends in many other media such as books, magazines, and advertisements. The researchers can use theories on blends from Plag (2003) and Bauer (2006) and check the base words in the dictionary. For the new words, the researchers can check the content of the articles whether they have any blends. The researchers can also analyze blends from televisions or from radios.

APPENDIX 3: The Jakarta Post, January 26, 2012

The image shows a collage of newspaper pages from The Jakarta Post, dated Thursday, January 26, 2012. The main page features a large photograph of a protest with the headline "Democratic Party in dire straits". Other visible headlines include "Obama urges taxing the rich", "A year on, Egyptians celebrate and protest", "No to child prisons", and "Liquor license's planned hike angers tourism association". There are also advertisements for "From Jakarta to Europe" and "Beverage Licensing".

Democratic Party in dire straits

By Alan H. Situmorang and Rajan D. Sathyan
 Some of the leading and most vocal critics of the Democratic Party (DP) are now in a state of dire straits, with some members of the party facing financial difficulties and others being expelled from the party. The party's leadership is also under scrutiny, with some members questioning the party's direction and its ability to win the upcoming general election.

A year on, Egyptians celebrate and protest

By Alan H. Situmorang
 A year on, Egyptians are celebrating the anniversary of the 2011 revolution that ousted Hosni Mubarak. However, the country is still facing significant challenges, including economic instability and political uncertainty. Protests are still being held across the country, demanding further reforms and accountability from the new leadership.

No to child prisons

By Alan H. Situmorang
 The Indonesian government's plan to build more child prisons has sparked widespread opposition from human rights organizations and the public. Many argue that child prisons are a violation of international law and that the government should focus on addressing the root causes of juvenile delinquency through social and educational programs.

Many government institutions collect migrant workers' data, but each of them is partial, incomplete, and most probably overlapping, resulting in double counting.

The book explores issues such as including the importance of sexual rights, the right to enjoy one's sexuality and masturbation. All considered taboo topics by conservatives in the nation's largest Muslim-majority nation.

The PKK's operations chief, Saifuddin, told reporters that the organization often faced difficulties in introducing family planning programs to the public due to ignorance and the mistaken perception that family planning contradicted the religion of Islam.

Saifuddin said that birth-control programs were important, considering that the nation's population has grown at an alarming rate.

According to the Central Statistics Agency (BPS), the population of Indonesia was 247 million in 2010.

Only 22 million people had participated in government-sponsored family-planning programs in 2010, according to the latest data from the National Family Planning Board (BKKBN).

But, North Sulawesi and Central Kalimantan were the provinces with the highest level of participation in family-planning programs, according to the data.

The population of West Java, the nation's most populous province, might increase dramatically to 140 million, according to one report that contraceptive use in West Java had the lowest over the past 10 years, falling off at 50 percent of rates, leaving off at 50 percent of rates, leaving off at 50 percent of rates.

His Muslim, Milla, one of the book authors, said that Indonesian society had always considered sex a taboo subject.

The Muslim scholar added that prevailing interpretations of Islamic law in the nation had concentrated a particular perception of sexuality as a forbidden subject.
