This study aims to examine accounting students' perceptions of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR), which includes the triple bottom line components, namely profit, people and planet. The benefits of this study are expected to increase the importance of CSR in business practices and increase insight for further researchers with similar topics.

This type of research is quantitative descriptive by distributing questionnaires to 107 students of the FE USD accounting study program, batches of 2020 and 2021. All questionnaires were filled in completely and processed. The data analysis technique used is descriptive statistics, which includes the mean and standard deviation to determine the level of students' understanding of each triple bottom line component.

The results of this study indicate that the planet component gets the highest score compared to the other 2 components. This is due to students' concern for the surrounding environment that has an impact on their lives.
